

a few thoughts
on creating an interesting
presentation

You've seen terrible presentations.

source

Maybe you've even created
terrible presentations.
(It's okay — we all have!)

This Is Some Important Point

- ✓ One amazing fact that you didn't realize
- ✓ Another amazing fact that maybe you knew
- ✓ A third fact that you might have know, but didn't realize was relevant
- ✓ And, of course, a fourth fact that needs to be stated because you can't just say it and expect them to remember
- ✓ And a fifth point, just for luck
- ✓ Oh, and did I mention point #6 too?
- ✓ And there's an important conclusion too

Use your knowledge of what you
don't like.

Create something
that you would
want to see.

source

- bullets are okay
- and sometimes
- necessary

but
really,
do you
need
them?

source

Text is great and often
necessary.

But sometimes it's nice
to have something else
to look at.

This is a video.

It could take a
second or two to
load.

It's worth waiting
for.

Just watch
it for 1 minute.

It's more
interesting
& informative
than this text.

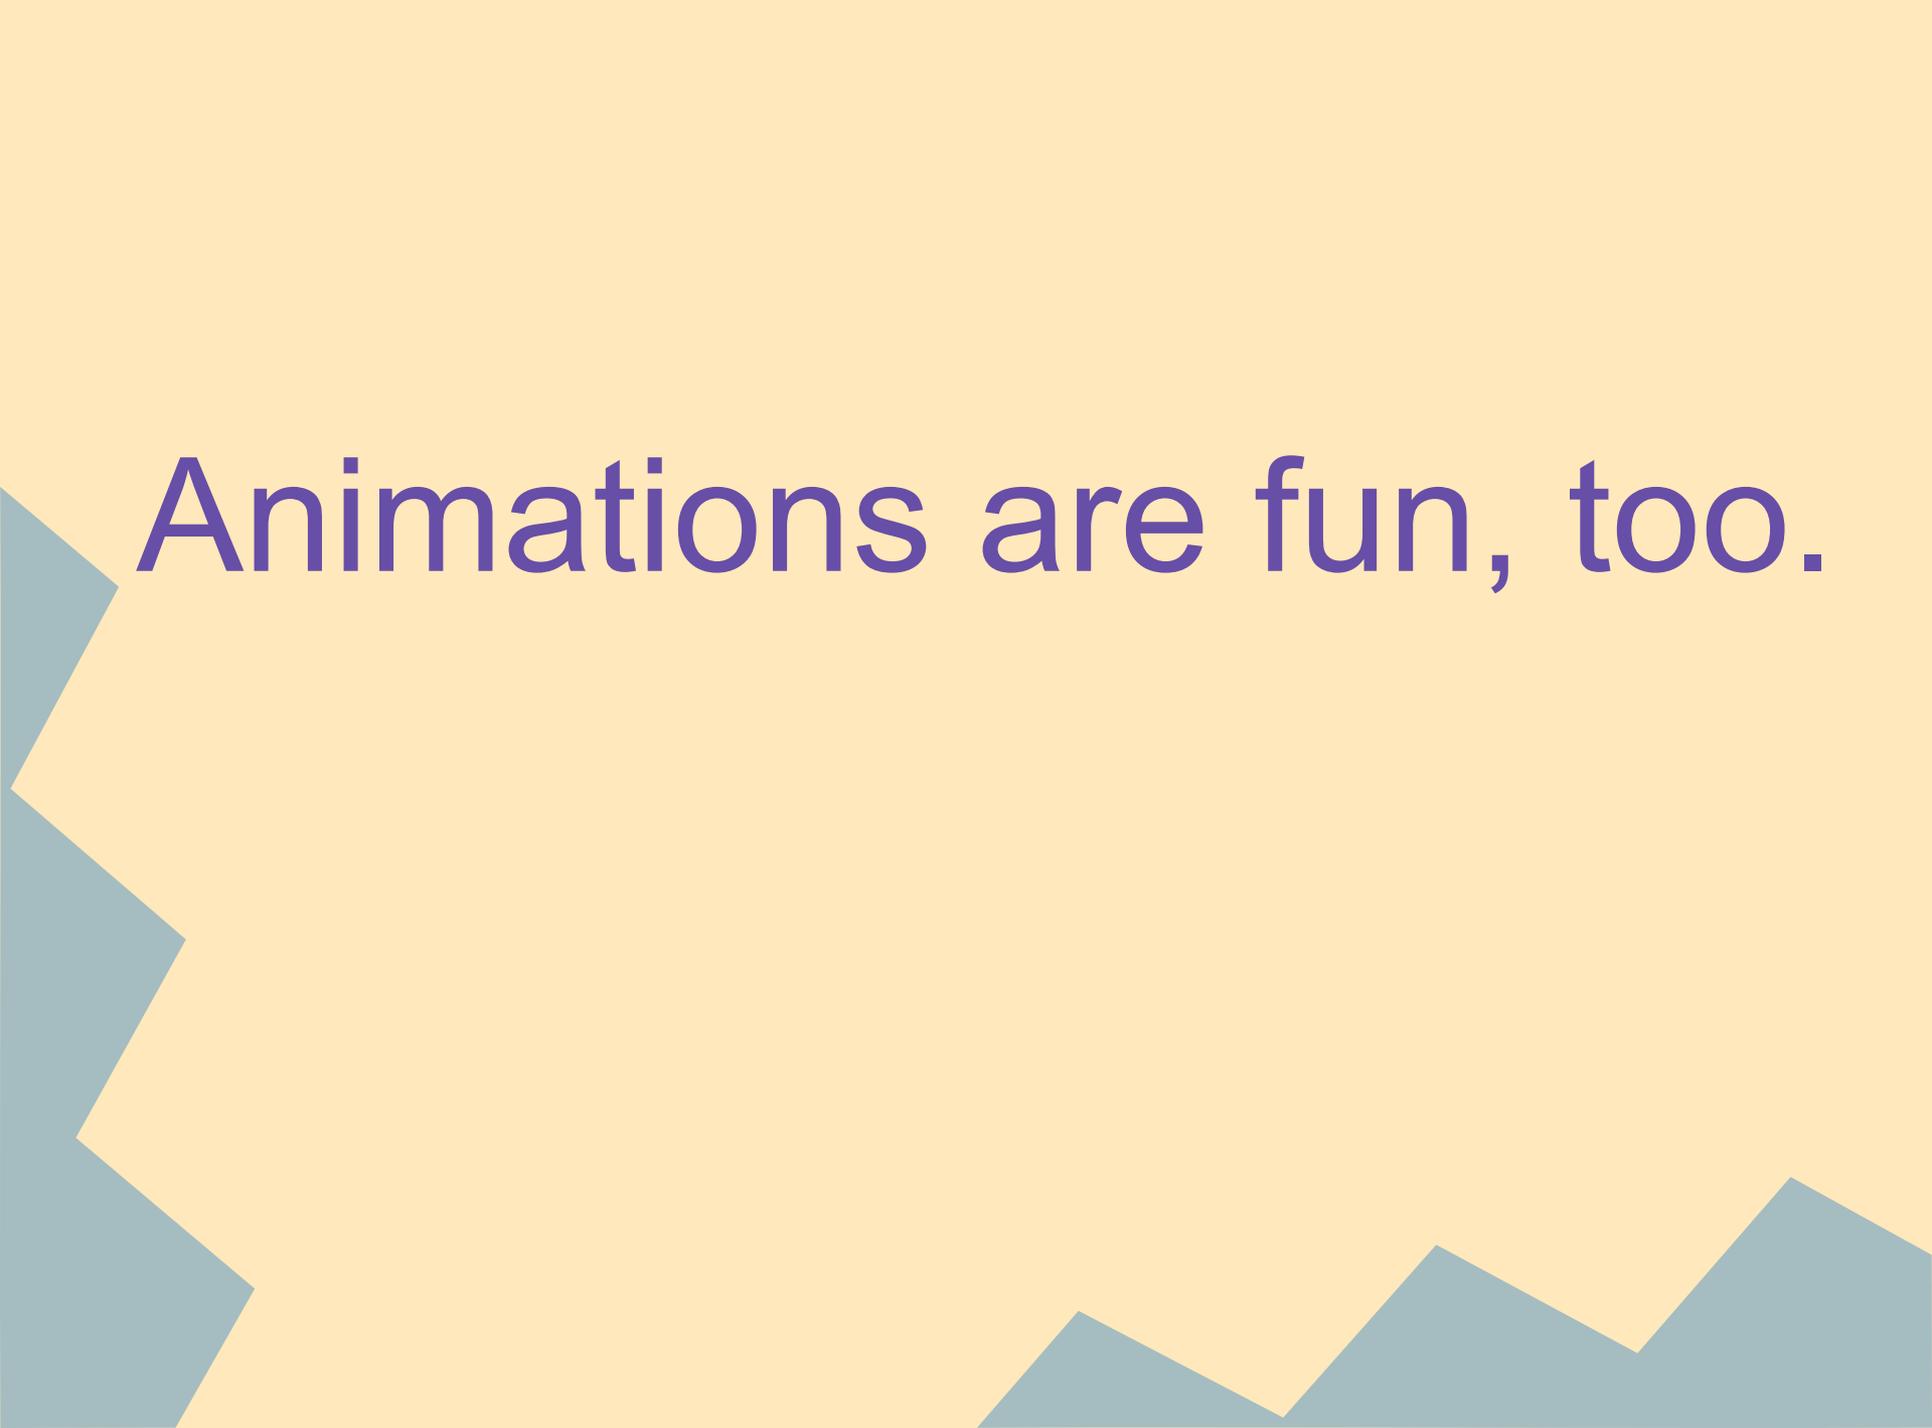

Even if you really need text, try adding
the occasional bit of

Word Art!

(go to the Insert
menu above for this option)

Word Art!
Word Art!

Used sparingly,
transitions can also
enliven a
presentation.

The image features a solid yellow background. On the left side, there are three overlapping teal-colored geometric shapes that resemble a jagged, stepped edge. At the bottom, there is a teal-colored shape that looks like a stylized mountain range or a series of peaks of varying heights.

Animations are fun, too.

Just don't get so complex that your presentation is confusing.

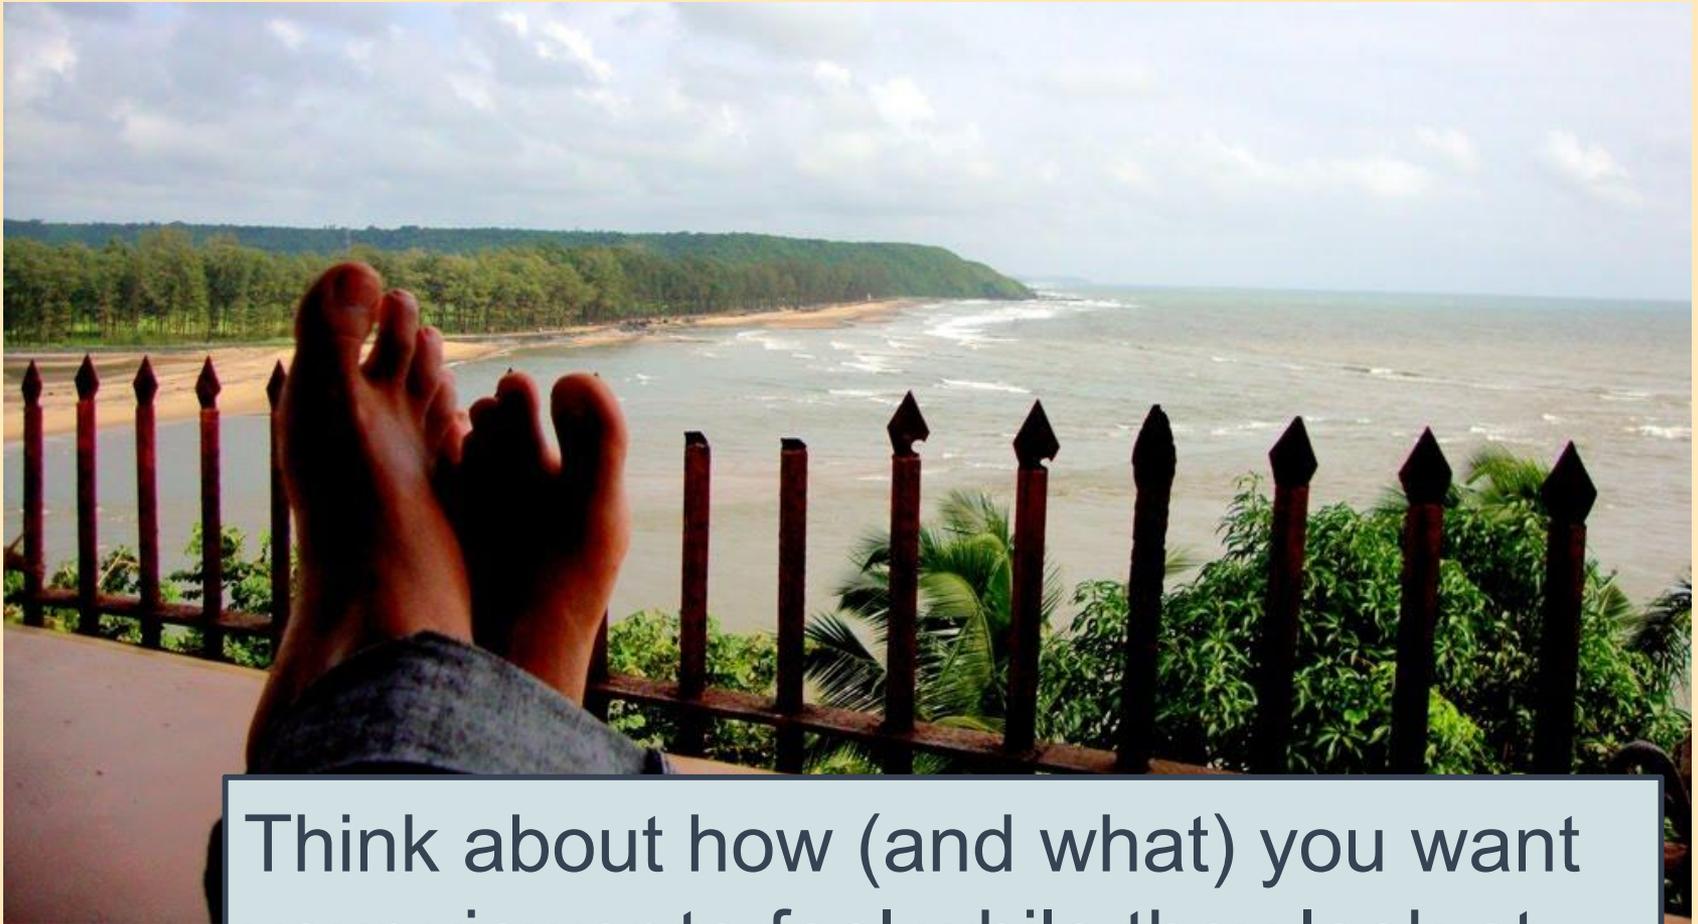

source

Consider the order and organization of your information.

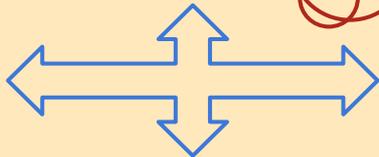

information.
order and
organization the
your of Consider

Consider order
information. and
the your of
organization

Think about how (and what) you want your viewer to feel while they look at your presentation.

Then strive to find a style and structure that will allow you to both present your information and achieve the feeling you want to inspire in your viewer.

For other people's ideas

click here

or here

or here

source

Finally, if you need more help
with Google Presentations
specifically, click this link.

source

the end

