OBSERVATION, ANALYSIS OR STRATEGY?

One way in which professional observations are different from the the observations people make in "real life" is that educators are very careful to keep observations and analysis separate.

In fact, even the type of language used to communicate analysis is different from the language used to record observations. See the main page on analysis in the Observing section of the website for more information.

This first set of 5 questions will help you learn to differentiate between observation and analysis. You will also begin to explore strategies; these are the plans that educators come up with after they have analyzed their observations.
